What Now?

Many young people and some adults have spent exciting days in a church camp, retreat, Vacation Bible school, or mission trip this past summer.

Many young people and some adults have spent exciting days in a church camp, retreat, Vacation Bible school, or mission trips this past summer.

Life changing decisions or commitments are often made that chart the course of these young people for years to come.

However, those decisions spent apart from the real world may soon fade or become blurred if proper follow-up operations are not put in place by the home church.

Church staff are often overwhelmed or simply unaware of the challenge of this important phase of church ministry. Every individual is significant and chosen by God to fulfill his/her role in kingdom ministry.

The harvest is in need of devoted laborers who have a passion and vision of being involved in the greatest life purpose they can know.

This can start in the lives of young people who develop a hunger and thirst for the knowledge of God.

Who knows what might have happened if a 16 year-old youth, Steve Estes, had not had the knowledge and passion to pour himself and his knowledge of scripture into the life of Joni Eareckson.

Joni thought her life was over as she struggled to make sense of living the life of a quadriplegic. Because of Steve's efforts and knowledge, the world has been richly blessed and multiplied thousands of handicapped children and their parents have been given hope by her blessed ministry.

What will the local church do to ensure these new Christians or recharged believers get started on the road to a lifetime of spiritual growth? We cannot assume that they will know how to study the Bible as opposed to reading a few verses without a thought of application.

Will they grasp the importance of prayer and the ministry of the Holy Spirit in the life of the believer? Will they know how to share their faith in a simple way with their peers? Will some mature Christian give their time and experience to one-on-one mentor the young person in this impressionable stage?

We may assume that if we get them enrolled in a Sunday school class or youth group they will automatically take root and grow. Kids need individual attention, someone with whom they can share their deepest concerns and questions.

Parents need to be involved but their homes may not be the laboratories of learning that they need.

Members of the church staff may not have the time to do the needed follow-up of all the young people, but mature church members can assist if given some training and guidelines. Of course, we must be careful not to overwhelm them with challenges beyond their ability to grasp and in so doing cause them to give up the struggle. They need to be challenged, but not overwhelmed. Age-appropriate materials and instruction are important.

We who have been in church all our lives may assume that new believers understand churchy language. They need to be able to express their questions, struggles, doubts and fears. Accountability is important.

They need to understand what it means to be a follower of Jesus—that it is not just praying a prayer, or raising a hand; it is not wanting to be or do better; it is a relationship that grows with obedience and a life of service.

Certainly, the names of those individuals concerned should be made public to the church so that concerned prayer can be offered in their behalf. The church is a family and each member is accountable for and to each other.

May God bless and guide as we all concern ourselves with this ministry.

The Stafford Air and Space Museum is pleased to announce the appointment of Colton Parkinson as its new Director. Colton brings a wealth of experience and a deep passion for aerospace and education to his new role.

Colton graduated from Purcell High School in 2010. He went on to graduate summa cum laude from Southwestern Oklahoma State University in 2022, earning a bachelor's degree in engineering technology.

Colton is currently pursuing a master's degree in education and engineering, which he is expected to complete in 2025.

Colton's Professional Experience includes a summer internship at NASA in 2019. He was awarded another internship with NASA in 2022, which was unfortunately canceled due to the COVID-19 pandemic. He participated in the NASA Pathways Internship Program from January through May 2021.

Colton served as a Stafford Scholar from April 2019 through May 2022. He was museum Building Maintenance and Registrar from June 2022 until May 2023. He spent last year as an instructor in the Engineering Technology Department at Southwestern Oklahoma State University.

"I had some very good memories with General Stafford," said Colton in a recent interview with Newstalk KCLI. "He was an amazing individual, and I don't think people realize how important he was to society as a whole. His mind was truly incredible."

Colton's first day for his new position will be August 5th. He will be succeeding long-time Museum Director Max Ary, who celebrated his retirement last week.

Colton and his wife, Arianna, are the owners of the Thomas Tribune and Old Caldwell Trails & Stables. They reside in Fay, Oklahoma.

Colton Parkinson's journey with the Stafford Air and Space Museum, coupled with his dedication to the field and his academic accomplishments, make him an excellent fit for the role of Director.

His leadership is expected to bring fresh perspectives and continue the museum's legacy of excellence in aerospace education and community engagement.

"We're currently expanding our education center, which will have a STEM Interactive Exhibit, a flight simulator, plus a big meeting area," said Colton. "We have some big things coming down the pipeline that we're looking forward to."

Oklahoma History: Shannon Miller, Oklahoma's "All Around" Olympian

Chase Wright
Staff Writer

With the 2024 Olympics underway, there's no better time to look back at one of the most dominating and decorated American gymnasts in history. Shannon Lee Miller, born on March 10, 1977, began her journey in gymnastics at the age of 5. Her family moved to Edmond, Oklahoma shortly after her birth in Rolla, Missouri, and her extraordinary talent within the sport was evident immediately. She traveled to Moscow a few years later for a gymnast camp and by the time she was in high school, she was not only balancing on the bar but balancing curriculum with a fast-paced training, travel, and competition schedule. After a third-place finish at the 1989 Olympic Festival at 12-years-old, her path to become the most decorated American gymnast, male or female (now surpassed by Simone Biles), is a tale of resilience, dedication, and extraordinary talent.

Shannon had a natural flair from a young age and began training under Steve Nunno and Peggy Liddick at Dynamo Gymnastics in Oklahoma City. Nunno and Peggy would become personal trainers to Miller throughout her run to seven Olympic medals and nine World Championships.

Miller's ascent in the gymnastics world continued with her debut internationally in 1990 and 1991 when she scored perfect 10s on the balance beam at the Swiss Cup and the Arthur Gander Memorial, won the all-around title with the highest total score ever by an American woman, and secured two silver medals at the World Championships in 1991, in Indianapolis. The dominating performances signaled her arrival as a formidable competitor on the global scene.

At the 1992 Barcelona Olympics, Miller scored the highest of any gymnast in the team competition, capturing the bronze medal for the US. In the all-around final competition, she lost by the closest scoring margin in Olympic history, 0.012 points behind first place. For event finals, she won three individual medals: a silver and two bronze medals. She came home with five total medals and the highest American athlete medal total in Barcelona. She competed in every event final at the Olympic Games that year, performing sixteen routines with thirteen of them receiving scores of 9.9 or higher out of 10.

During the 1993 and 1994 World Championships, Miller won the all-around title, becoming the first American gymnast to win back-to-back world all-around titles. In 1995, Miller struggled with injury and had to withdraw from the vault and floor finals. She still achieved the highest total score of the American team.

The pinnacle of her career came in 1996. Miller was struggling from sever tendinitis in her left wrist, a pulled hamstring, and an inability to compete at the Olympic Trials and that year's World Championships. Luckily, she had secured first place at the US National Championships earlier and the American Olympic team allowed her to compete at the Olympics later that year due to her top performer finish. By the time of the Summer Olympic Games, her injury was healed, and she led the American team to Atlanta for one of the most dazzling displays of gymnastics ever seen.

The women's gymnastics team earned the nickname the Magnificent Seven, winning the first ever gold medal for the US in the team competition. It was a grueling duel between the US team and the Soviet Union's Unified Team which had won the team event at every Olympics since 1952. During the competition, three teams were trading places for first. It was a race between Russia, the US, and the Romanian team. Each member of the Magnificent Seven showed up to perform.

As the competition moved to the Vault, Russia was in the lead by 0.897 points. The US team took the lead during the vault at first with an opportunity to seal the win but had a surprise setback as US gymnast Dominique Moceanu had issues on both of her attempts, over-rotating and falling backwards on her landing. Now, the opportunity for the gold swung to Russia, with their world champion and reigning national champions set to perform their routines after. The US's next hope lay in their vault anchor Kerri Strug up next.

Strug performed the same vault, but also uncharacteristically fell back onto the mat on her first attempt, suffering a major injury to her ankle tearing two ligaments. The team and the crowd were in shock. Throughout the competition, the miraculous US gymnastics run had won over the crowd who had been chanting for the US. Now, the Cinderella story looked to be over. The competition allowed two attempts per gymnast, and it was decided that Kerri would try again, injured.

As she gingerly prepared to go again, attempting to walk off the injury. After shaking it out as best she could, Kerri tore down the runway, hit the springboard, twisted through the air, and stuck the landing. The stadium erupted in cheers. Immediately, Kerri collapsed from her pain, and a beat later, the score flashed across the screens - 9.712.

The gold medal was secured for the US and images and videos of her vault became one of the most historic moments in American and Olympic History.

During the medal ceremony, Kerri was brought back out after getting her injury tended too and while getting their medals the crowd began chanting "USA".

With the gold medal for the team event secured, it was time for individual finals. Shannon Miller took Kerri's place for the vault final. The finals went well across all competitions and Miller ended the 1996 Olympics as the team's highest scoring member and earned herself a gold medal on the balance beam and a bronze medal. She received the only individual gold for the US at that year's Olympics. After the competition ended, the Magnificent Seven went on multiple tours, talk shows, and meetings, receiving an induction into the US Olympic Hall of Fame as a team. In 2012, the vault moment from Kerri Strug was chosen as the number 1 Olympic moment in a Top 30 list for moments in NBC Olympic history. The team inspired a generation of gymnasts.

Following the Olympic triumphs, Miller faced some old challenges, struggling with injuries and surgeries, eventually concluding her career with seven Olympic medals and nine World Championship medals. Miller was the first American to win the balance beam at an Olympics and the first woman to win an individual gold fully attending.

Miller has been inducted into the US Gymnastics Hall of Fame, the US Olympic Hall of Fame, the International Gymnastics Hall of Fame, and the Women's International Sports Hall of Fame. She became the only woman, in any sport, to be inducted into the United States Olympic Hall of Fame twice (receiving an induction as an individual and as part of a team).

During retirement, Miller has dedicated herself to promoting health and fitness, founding Shannon Miller Lifestyle, a company focused on health and fitness for women, and the Shannon Miller Foundation, a foundation dedicated to combating childhood obesity.

Her influence extends beyond the realm of gymnastics. Her advocacy for wellness and her role as a motivational speaker has cemented her status as an exemplary role model. Today, she continues to inspire people to pursue their dreams with tenacity and unwavering dedication. Her story is one of triumph over adversity, the importance of perseverance, and the legacy of a true champion.

Connections Food & Resource Center was enthusiastic to report a successful two-day food drive last week. According to Executive Director Elizabeth Amen, as well as the Weatherford Connections Facebook page, the "Fill the (Food Bank) Truck" charity event has reportedly raised 887 pounds of food.

The food drive was hosted in conjunction with Whataburger in Weatherford. From July 23rd to 24th, 8 a.m. to 8 p.m., various signs were displayed inside the restaurant advertising the food drive. Even the large sign outside the restaurant was changed to help spread the word.

Whataburger patrons were incentivized to donate canned food and other non-perishable items for a coupon good for one free Whataburger on their next visit.

Connections Food & Resource Center is now looking forward to its next fundraiser, which is scheduled for September 12. Devon Energy, a longtime partner of Connections Food & Resource, will be hosting a Golf Tournament in association with United Way. All proceeds will go towards Connections.

Last year's Devon Energy's fundraiser, which was their annual "Give for Good" Employee Silent Auction, brought in around $70,500 for Connections.
